

The Twitter Deal: A Case Study in Contractual Certainty

Professor Steven Davidoff Solomon

University of California, Berkeley

I examine the Twitter Deal and the Provisions in the Merger Agreement which defined the parties rights. I find that the current form of merger agreement (as opposed to prior iterations from the 2008 financial crisis) shows how sophisticated parties negotiate for transactional certainty in complex, financed transactions. Ultimately, these contractual rights created tremendous value for Twitter shareholders.